What are the characteristics of effective, creative problem solvers? How would educators create school and classroom conditions to learn, practice, assess and report students' growth toward mastery of these intelligent behaviors? In this presentation sixteen habits of mind characteristic of efficient, intelligent problem-solvers will be described. Their place in the curriculum will be explored and teaching strategies and school conditions intended to develop, communicate, and assess these characteristics will be presented.