Dealing with the Unknown by Means of the Known

More than ever is the educational system of today supposed to prepare the students for a future that we know little about. How can this be done? After all what the educational system has to offer is what is known. I will suggest in my presentation that the students can indeed be prepared for dealing with entirely novel situations and that can be done by educating the eyes through which they are going to see those novel situations in the future. The powerfulness of their seeing tomorrow will be a function of how their educational experiences vary and overlap today.
