Muslims in the age of Information

This paper presents an outline of Islamic theological opinions on new information and communication technologies from the introduction of the printing press up till the Internet. Have new technologies changed and challenged the transmission of Islamic knowledge and religious authorities? The paper is based on a contextual reading of a large number of legal documents (fatwas) dating from the 18th century up till contemporary discussions.

Göran Larsson, Department of Religious Studies and Theology, Göteborg University/LearnIT